

A DAY IN THE LIFE AT BLUEBEAM

It's hard to imagine what a career would be like at any company. Day one is inevitably eventful, but what about every day thereafter? On day 745, what sort of projects will I be working on? On day 1072, who will I interact with? On day 120, how much fun will I have? These are all very important questions that often swim around our heads before we can comfortably Attach our resume and hit Send.

So to help get a sense of how working at Bluebeam could feel months down the line, we asked eight people in various departments to talk about their day, the same day: Tuesday, June 16, 2015. For one person, that was day 745. For another person, it was day 1072 or day 120, and so on.

Sure enough, everyone talked about very unique treks across the Bluebeam Balance Beam between hard work and fun, collaboration and autonomy. Perhaps even more interestingly, each person had a unique way of looking at and describing their day.

Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (and/or title?) and number of days.

Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (or title?) and number of days.

Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (or title?) and number of days.

Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (or title?) and number of days.

All links. On click, a box opens displaying each person's entry with images.

```
graph TD; A[All links. On click, a box opens displaying each person's entry with images.] --> B[Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (and/or title?) and number of days.]; A --> C[Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (or title?) and number of days.]; A --> D[Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (or title?) and number of days.]; A --> E[Image: Picture of person
Text: Department (or title?) and number of days.];
```